

Award winning Butthead Covers, Inc. returns to PGA Show with many new designs

The 2005 PGA Merchandise Show in Orlando served as the official global launch for Butthead Covers, Inc. Turning golf Upside Down with their cute and funny golf club head covers, the first year exceeded all expectations.

Many of the LPGA pros carried the covers throughout the year and so were seen on the Golf Channel weekly, bouncing down the fairways in famous bags. The innovative designs caught the attention of Sports Illustrated, Business Week and so many other publications, radio and TV shows throughout the year. They were the hit of numerous charity golf tournaments as tee prizes.

Butthead Covers is a family oriented business. Husband Danny is the COO. Son, Mike designed each cover and associated graphics. Daughter, Amanda, was a junior club champion who went on to play collegiate golf.

No butts about it, Alice and Danny Scott feel very blessed to be able to blend years of extensive corporate training and leadership experience with their passion for life, golf, and family. These hilarious animal head covers – not the heads of the animals, but the other half, are designed to protect the club and shaft, while bringing humor to the game of golf. These animals look like they dove in the bag, when placed on the club.

Dalmations and Gators, Lions and Bees and many other species other than these protect clubs from injury. These fun and wholesome head covers have a patent pending insert to fit and protect the largest 460cc driver as well as the smaller woods

Butthead Covers are wholesome fun for the serious golfer who likes to kick butt on the course or the occasional duffer who likes nothing but(t) fun! They had over 60 designs in their booth at the 2006 PGA Merchandise Show in Orlando in late January. All products can be seen at www.buttheadcovers.com
